Walter Camp was born on April 17, 1859, in New Haven, Connecticut. From 1876 to 1882 he studied at Yale University, where he studied medicine and business. Walter Camp was an author, sports director, chairman of the board of the New Haven Clock Company and a director of Peck Brothers. In 1888-1914 he was general sports director and head football coach at Yale University, and in 1888-1912 - chairman of the football committee of Yale University. Camp played football in Ele and helped develop rules of the game from rugby and football rules to the rules of American football as we know them today. One of the forerunners of Walter Camp's influence was William Ebb Ellis, a student at the school of rugby in England. In 1823, Ellis was the first person to be honored for taking the ball during a football game and running with it, thereby breaking and changing the rules. In 1876, at the Congress of Massooyth, the first attempts were made to write down the rules of American football. Walter Camp edited all the rules of American football until his death in 1925. Walter Camp has made the following changes from rugby and football to American football: one side has retained undisputed possession of the ball until while this side does not surrender the ball as a result of own violations of the line of scrimmage11 on the team instead of 15crethed defender and central forward passstandardized scoring system, numerical scoring safety, interference, penalties, and a neutral zone of tackling as low as the knee was allowed - 188A touchdown increased in value to six points and field goals went down to 3 points - 1912 The NFL or National Football League was formed in 1920.
